📍 Rockefeller University

Constantina Theofanopoulou is a Post-Doctoral researcher at the University of Rockefeller (New York).

Her research interests range from neuroscience to genomics. For her Ph.D. (University of Barcelona, Duke University and Rockefeller University) she worked on the neurobiology of language, and specifically on the social reward mechanisms of vocal learning, studying the role of oxytocin in vocal learning in songbirds (Theofanopoulou et al. 2017 Proceedings B). This project led her to realize that the oxytocin/vasotocin field was suffering from an old and inconsistent gene nomenclature, which was hampering advances and translation of findings. Using genomic tools, she proposed novel ways of how gene nomenclature should be revisited, aiming at a universal vertebrate gene nomenclature, shaking traditional views of the pre-genomic era (Theofanopoulou et al. 2021 Nature). She has also studied the genomics of human social evolution, bringing forth evidence for a significant overlap in positive selection signals between humans and domesticated species, shedding light to the Darwinian theory of human self-domestication (Theofanopoulou et al. 2017 PLoS ONE).
